The Janesville Daily Gazette.

VOLUME 24 | Entered at the Post Office at Janesville, Wis., as second-class matter. | JANESVILLE, WISCONSIN, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1880. | Published Every Evening Except Sunday, at $7 a Year. | NUMBER 208

It is not improbable that Illinois will give Garfield 50,000 majority.

The defeat of the South in 1865, and again in 1880, are lessons which should be turned to some profit to that section of the country.

The majority in Nevada for Hancock will be about 650. If Mr. Chairman Barnum thinks little Nevada is worth what it cost the Democrats, he is entitled to it.

They are carrying Moody to Arabia, at least his sermons have been translated into the language of that country, and missionaries read them to their converts every Sunday.

Times have changed with Miss Clara Morris during the last eleven years. Then she made a contract to play eight times a week for $20, but now she plays six times a week for $2,000.

Barnum, not having anything to do after the election, he has started the cry of "fraud." He should keep that up, and the longer it runs the more Democrats will become Republicans.

The electoral vote is at last settled, General Garfield will get 219, and Hancock 150. As Garfield has 34 more than are necessary for a choice, there will be no 8 by 7 business next winter.

In 1876 Hayes got 53,000 votes in New York city, and in 1880, Garfield got 81,000. Tilden received a majority in the city of 51,000 and Hancock 41,376. This majority is 53,000 less than the Democrats expected.

The standard silver dollars are creeping out of the vaults at Washington, and getting into circulation. During the month of October 3,500,000 of them were shipped from the different mints, and 666,000 of the dollars go to Texas.

It is announced that the American bible revision committee has completed the revision of the English revision of the New Testament, and has sent the result of its labor to England. The revision committee in England will meet sometimes this month for final action. The revised New Testament will be issued by the University presses at Oxford and Cambridge, and the book will be ready for the market in February 1881. The Old Testament, about the revision of which comparatively little has been done, will not be ready for two or three years. The American revisers of the New Testament have devoted some eight years to the work, and have not received any compensation, and do not ask any. The necessary expenses have been provided for by subscriptions coming from persons who had an unselfish interest in having the bible revised. An arrangement has been made that any person who is a friend of the undertaking, who sends $10 or more before February next to Dr. Schaff, of New York, will receive a memorial copy of the first University edition, handsomely bound and inscribed.

The suit against Mr. Tilden by the government to recover a large amount of income-tax which he has fraudulently kept from the government for a number of years, is not yet disposed of. The amount alleged to be due is $100,000. For various reasons the suit has not been pressed, and from time to time continuances have been granted at the request of Mr. Tilden's counsel. The officers of the government were so careful of his political interests, that when his name was mentioned in connection with the nomination at Cincinnati, Commissioner Raum advised a postponement of the trial, so that it would not seem that Mr. Tilden's political enemies were attempting to drive him from the field. His lawyers agreed with Commissioner Raum, and General Woodford, counsel for the government, and accordingly the suit was postponed until after the Cincinnati convention. This was supposed to have been an act of kindness for Mr. Tilden, but when he heard what was done, he became enraged. The old fox was sharper than his attorneys. He had made arrangements to try the case at the time it was called before the convention, and had secured the temporary absence from the country of the principal witness for the government, so that when the case was called it would have been disposed of in short notice, and he acquitted.

Many an honest hearted Democrat will go to his grave forever, without seeing his hopes realized. Living from year to year, on the hopes of a good time coming, he now sees that all earthly things are but an idle dreaming.—Janesville City Times.

These are the words of a man burdened by disappointment and bowed down by grief over the result of the political contest which resulted in the righteous defeat of the Democratic party. We know it is hardly possible to smile sweetly and work with a hearty good will and with unshaken faith in the future, when one sees all his cherished hopes blasted at his feet. There is not even a crumb of comfort in working for a party when that party is met year after year by rebuke from the people and crushed beneath the weight of a silent ballot. And there can be but little hope that things will materially change when the party is so notoriously bad. If the editor of the Times works and hopes that the present Democratic party will some day rise into power over the dead body of the Republican party, he will, in all probability, close a life of bitter disappointment. So long as the Democratic party remains as it is at present constituted, and so long as the people of the North retain their intelligence and reason, that party will never rise to the dignity of a dominant party in this country. It would be a shameful mockery to justice and a burning insult to the patriotic dead, to allow the Democratic party of to-day to control this government. The people of the North understand this, and will never permit the Democracy that controlling power.

Probably the Times man was in earnest when he wrote the lines quoted from his paper, and probably he keenly feels the sting of disappointment; and probably he really thought that Hancock would be elected; but throwing aside all prejudice for a moment and taking a calm and manly view of the whole subject, will the Times give one single reason why he or any other member of the Democratic party had any cause to hope for the success of General Hancock? Will he please name one act—we want to be as charitable as possible, and ask for only one—the Democratic party has done in the last twenty-five years to entitle it to the respect and confidence of the people? The editor of the Times should think of these things, and in his sober moments and when his mind is not influenced by partisanship, his conscience will certainly feel that a party founded on hate, sectionalism, fraud, perjury, lying, and a dishonest vote, cannot win in the North. He has defended the Democratic party in the commission of these crimes against the rights of the people, and he is now reaping his reward.

THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP.

The Madison correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, in a lengthy article why a Democrat should not be appointed to the vacancy on the supreme bench, closes up as follows:

"The court meets on the 9th, when eulogies will be pronounced upon the late Chief Justice Ryan, after which it will adjourn for a stated period out of respect to his memory. The general drift of opinion in the State among the legal fraternity is that the governor will appoint Judge Cole to the position of chief justice, and the Hon. J. B. Cassoday as associate justice. Judge Cole has won his promotion by serving twenty-five years upon the bench with signal ability, and Mr. Cassoday has long stood in the front rank at the bar in Wisconsin."

The Fond du Lac Commonwealth, in favoring Mr. Cassoday for the vacancy, says:

"Unless it should be determined by the Governor to promote Associate Justice Cole to the chief justiceship (which would be eminently proper), there is no man in Wisconsin whose appointment would give the Commonwealth such unalloyed satisfaction as the selection of Hon. J. B. Cassoday, of Janesville. Mr. Cassoday unites with all the requisite judicial qualities, a character for uprightness, conscientiousness, and integrity, peculiarly fitting him for this most honorable office. He has no superior in Wisconsin for legal attainments, and he is the peer of any man in all that goes to form a noble character. He would adorn the bench. If it should be decided that Judge Cole shall be given the place, then we trust Mr Cassoday may be appointed his successor as Associate Justice.

GARFIELD AND THE PRESIDENTIAL TRUST.

No man in the United States will carry on his shoulders during the coming four months more responsibility than James A. Garfield. He has been called to fill the greatest office in the world, and the question among those who doubted the wisdom of his nomination is, will he fill it well? The Democrats hope that he will be confronted with so many perplexities and difficulties in disposing of the patronage under his control, that he will drive the Republican party in factions, and that the Democratic party will be benefitted four years hence by the quarrels and dissensions growing out of "a hungry set of office-seekers." If the Democratic party can not find anything more substantial than this, on which to plant their hopes, they are sure to be doomed to disappointment. The Republican party is sober-minded enough to comprehend the burdens which President Garfield has to bear. It has been tried for twenty years, and during that time it has not been found wanting in any emergency. It will not add to the responsibilities which General Garfield will carry to the white house. It will not embarrass him in the administration of the government, but it will give him that assistance which will make his management of the affairs of the country an honor to the man and a credit to the party.

But as to James A. Garfield, personally, the Democrats will be sadly deceived if they think he will quarrel with the party which elected him. Those who know General Garfield will not for a moment entertain the thought that he will be controlled by strong-headed, indiscreet, and selfish partisans. He is a man of independence, intelligence, and high motives. As a type of manhood which is an honor to this country, he has no superior in all the broad land. He can go to Washington and use the great powers and responsibilities of the Presidential office, with as much wisdom, manliness, and honor, as he demeaned himself at his home at Mentor during the trying scenes of the great campaign. When personal abuse ran high, and when the managers of the Democratic party resorted to all the disgraceful schemes the evil minds could invent, to blacken his name and to injure his chances of success, yet he was unmoved, and his simple dignity, his uneffected manner, the wisdom of his sayings to the thousands who called on him, challenged the admiration of the country. He made no mistakes then, and when he enters the white house he will make no mistakes there. He will be equal to the trust. The calm, dignified, frank, independent, and sensible behavior which followed him so grandly through the campaign, will be his companions during the four years he will be the chief magistrate of this nation.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—A collision on the Northwestern road between two freight trains, this morning, caused several to be injured, and twenty cars demolished.

CALIFORNIA.

Special to the Gazette.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—Garfield's plurality is 145 with a few precincts unreported. The Republicans will have the organization of the Assembly.

VIRGINIA.

The Old Dominion in Doubt with Chances in Favor of the Republicans.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Later returns from Virginia show that the contest between the Republican and regular Democratic tickets is very close, and some hope is entertained that Garfield may come out ahead when the whole State has been heard from. A gentleman here received the following dispatch this afternoon from Edmund Burke, United States District Attorney for Virginia; "Virginia is in doubt. Half of the State only gives the Democrats 4,000 majority, with the strong Republican counties to hear from. The Democrats are inclined to concede the State."

CONGRESS.

The Political Complexion of the Next House.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5—The Republicans will control the House of Representatives, but it will be by a narrow majority. Figures just made up at the Republican congressional rooms from the latest dispatches show a Republican majority of not more than three, and possibly one. In this, however, only Republicans are counted, the Greenbackers being classed as opposition.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 5.—This morning's papers make the vote of the State practically a tie. This change from last night's report is due less to any turn in the reports of the precincts than to a revision of the tabulated statements. These differ considerably, and there are evidences of loose work, sufficient to discredit all estimates. Undoubtedly the estimate of 2,000 last night was too high, and the best opinion seems to be that Garfield will have a plurality of from 500 to 1,000.

INGERSOLL.

He Pronounces the Democratic Party Dead.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 5.—Robert G. Ingersoll was serenaded to-night by the Tow-path club. His speech was full of brilliant points. He pronounced the Democratic party dead, and said it had gone to a place in which he did not believe, and he pitied the place. He besought the angel Gabriel, if he must blow over the Democratic graveyard, to blow lightly. As for Ben Butler, the Republicans could forgive him if the Democracy could.

SHOO FLY!

The Way He Gives it to Barnum is no Joke.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5—Sunset Cox is quite free to talk. He thinks the defeat of the Democracy was mainly due to the fact that Democratic editors were not allowed to advocate free trade among the farmers. "Mr. Barnum is the man to blame," said Mr. Cox. "He ought never to have been placed at the head of the National committee,—a position for which he is utterly unfit. He never knew any political campaign, except its mercenary side, and is altogether the most unconscionable person I ever knew. He would not permit us to advocate free trade where it would have saved votes. We lost Connecticut through his folly, and in New Jersey we barely managed to sneak through the fence by corpseachching the Republicans on the tariff question. Mr. Barnum was allowed to manage the campaign in deference to the views of Mr. Tilden, and he has proved a most expensive luxury to the Democracy." Mr. Cox said that he hoped to be able to give President Garfield a hearty support. He thought there would be no difficulty in his doing this, provided the Administration should devote its energies to the benefit of the whole people.

GENERAL GARFIELD.

MENTOR, Nov. 5.—General Garfield received seventy-five more congratulatory telegrams to-day, making about 900 in all. Every mail brings huge packages of letters of similar import. Those letters that require answering are immediately attended to, the General being as prompt in his correspondence as in the past.

Notification was received to-night that the ladies of the Lake Erie Female Seminary would to-morrow pay their regards to the President-elect and his wife.

GENERAL SHERMAN.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5—The story telegraphed from here about the retirement of General Sherman is regarded in army circles as perfectly absurd. The act providing for the retirement of officers of the army does not apply to Generals Sherman and Sheridan. The former is in splendid health, and very fond of his position, and it is not at all probable he will ask to be placed on the retired list for many years to come. It is understood that between now and the meeting of the next Congress the President will retire all officers of the army and navy who are eligible for retirement.

CONDEMNED.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Postmaster General Maynard to-day received a private letter from Constantinople, bringing information that judgment has been delivered in the Ottoman central criminal court in the case of the three men implicated in the murder of the Rev. Mr. Parsons, American missionary. The actual perpetrator of the dead was condemned to death, and the other two to fifteen years' imprisonment with hard labor.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5—The latest returns from the counties in New York State make the majority for Garfield and Arthur 23,069. These figures may be slightly changed by official reports, but the result will probably not be affected materially:

Democratic plurality in 1876, 32,816.
Republican majority in 1880, 23,010.
Republican gain, 55,887.

EDISON'S ELECTRIC LIGHT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The stockholders of the Edison Electric Light Company have been assessed $60 a share, to meet the expenses of Edison's recent experiments. The stock has risen to $1,200 a share on a report that Edison will make public experiment with his invention early next month.

SHOT DEAD.

MADISON, Ind., Nov. 5.—George Glass was shot dead last night by George Watson or Fred French. It is alleged that Glass hurrahed for Jeff Davis, and in the altercation which followed Glass shot Watson in the leg, and it is supposed Watson returned the fire, killing Glass.

BRONSON HOWARD.

DETROIT, Nov. 5—Bronson Howard, author of "The Banker's Daughter," "Saratoga," and other popular plays, was Married October 27th to Miss Alice Maud Culverwell, daughter of a London physician. Mr. Howard is a resident of Detroit, and his parents reside here, but he has been in England for the past eighteen months.

Casper Weitzel, Officer No. 10,

A MODERN MIRACLE.

LONDON, Nov. 5—A man named Shields in Perth, Scotland, has just invented a curious method of calming the stormy sea. The plan is to sink in the sea, bottles filled with oil. These being carried far down by weights attached to them, are broken by the superior pressure of water at the depth which they attain, and the oil thereupon rises to the surface and smoothes the waves by its presence. An experiment tried at Peter Head is said to have met with amazing success, and Scotch newspapers are full of descriptions and comments on this modern miracle.

MRS. WM. TIPPETT, Owasco, N. Y., says:—I have worn an Improved Excelsior Kidney Pad about three weeks, and have received great relief from it for pain in the back.—See Adv.

The Great Bronze God.

The tree-bordered, gray stone walk which brings you to Daibutz was skillfully contrived so that, without any previous glimpses, a sudden step brought us full into the presence of his bronze majesty, in the very spot where he has rested immobile for over 600 years. He loomed up right before us, a colossal figure of Buddha, represented sitting, oriental fashion, on a tremendous granite platform. His great hands were lying palm up on his enormous lap and the sitting posture and the inadequately low pedestal made the figure look so disportionately broad that it was at first difficult to realize its height. But a glance at the surrounding trees and buildings, over which it towers, and the feeling of being microscopically minute which crept over us, soon brought us to the sense of its size. It bears a strong family likeness to all other images of Buddha, but its proportions render it unusually impressive, for while the non-superstitious American mind can rise superior to the toy idols of the mantelpiece, a god forty-four feet high and eighty-seven in circumference, with an eight-and-a-half-foot face, a thirty-four foot knee and a thumb three and a half feet in circumference, is not to be sneezed at. Huge earrings and a close-fitting, bead-like head-dress give it rather an Egyptian air. There is a legend that the god was ordered by a pious Empress of Japan, who commanded contributions of copper coin from all the faithful and received enough to melt over into this immense image. We were struck at once by the discolored appearance of the bronze, which is gray, mottled and weatherbeaten from the suns and storms of six centuries, and then by the wonderful expression of the figure, which is the embodiment of majestic repose. It is somehow more natural to look to the texture than to the meaning of any oriental work of art, and their intelligent expression of an idea was always a surprise. In our lordly way we expected skill rather than ideas from them, but acquaintance with them very soon changed that misconception. Like all images of Buddha, Daibutz pays study. It is artistically valuable as the almost perfect expression of a grand idea—the idea of a divine repose. There is nothing dull in its immobility, yet nothing sphinx-like behind its serenity; no riddle to unravel or to vex you. It is simply the perfection of philosophy—a passionless calm. It is the perfect development and perfect gratification of all the faculties; the consequent absence of desire or unrest. Those who study and love it fancy that the spell of its quiet serenity descends upon them and fills them, like hasheesh or the lotus, with a sense of perfect peace. Our merry crowd were each and all just a little touched by the grand old god, and before we left we had mutually confessed feelings of respect and admiration for him and unanimously resolved that he should adorn our parlors were he only a few degrees smaller. We were then shown to a small dark door, which led (for the image is utterly hollow) into its very bosom, which is fitted up in a rude way as a temple. A break-neck climb up a vertebral stairway took us to the small window which made darkness visible, whence we could look on the comparatively Lilliputian grove, which affords shelter to picnic parties and makes a short-waisted back-ground to the sixty odd feet of Daibutz and pedestal.

While in the interior it seemed incredible that this monstrous image could be the work of the puny Japanese. It was cast, we were told, in sections, and the parts so joined as to appear one casting. The bronze of which it is made is excellent in quality, containing considerable gold. Gold was once very cheap in Japan, and as late as 1600 they exchanged gold for silver, weight for weight, with the Dutch.—The Californian.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1880.

"WATCH THE BOX."

The 6:20 evening train, No. 39, was over an hour late that night. Cause enough, Heaven knows. For twelve hours the storm had raged and now instead of showing any signs of breaking the rain came down in torrents from the inky sky and the thunder rolled ominously overhead. A bad storm to drive an engine through, as anybody would have known and the wonder is that No. 39 was not three hours late instead of one. Old Duke Granger, the trustiest, nerviest engineer on the road, rounded the curve just below Red Ravine station at twenty-six minutes past seven. I breathed a sigh of relief when I saw the headlight cut a hole in the darkness. The station bridge might have given away in a storm like that and I was beginning to get nervous over this thought.

Somehow everything made me nervous that night. It was just the kind of weather when things look all out of gear, any way.

Then, I suppose, the knowledge of that money package being due and failing to come on the 11:30, as it should have done, had its effect on me. I didn't relish the idea of keeping $13,000 in cash until the next day. Eldridge & Ricketson had been down themselves to meet the morning train and if the package had come I could have turned it over to them at once and that would have been the end of the matter. But it didn't come. That's a way things have in this world, when you most want 'em.

There wasn't a soul at the station that night except myself, and there were only two passengers who got off the train. I speak of 'em that way not meaning to be disrespectful, or make light of solemn things; only its habit, I suppose; for most people would say there was only one passenger that got off at Red Ravine, seeing that the second of 'em was carried out of the express car in a wooden box. Usually, when a body was coming on I got word beforehand, but this one took me quite by surprise, and added not a little to the nervousness I already felt.

"Who is it?" I asked as the box was carried into the station.

The passenger who had got off the train and who was a stranger to me, answered my inquiry.

"The body is that of my sister-in-law," said he. "She was the neice of Thomas Eldridge—doubtless you know him. Her death was very sudden. She is to be buried in Mr. Eldridge's lot here."

"Then I suppose the body is to be left in my charge until to-morrow," said I.

"Yes," answered the stranger. "Do you suppose that I can get to Mr. Eldridge's myself to-night?"

"Well," I replied, "it's a good four miles, and in such a storm as this——"

"I'll wait until to-morrow," interrupted the stranger. "There is some sort of a hotel here, isn't there?"

"Yes, a good one. You'll have to foot it, though; but it's only a matter of a quarter of a mile, and you can't miss your way, for the road up the hill leads straight to the house."

Here I made my way out to the platform again and made my way on the express car where the money package, which all along I had secretly hoped wouldn't come, was delivered to me by the messenger. As he gave it to me he said: "You'll want to keep a sharp eye on that, Billy. There's enough in it to make one of your Red Ravineers put a bullet through your head and never give you the chance to object."

"I'll look out for the Red Ravineers and the package, too," said I, confidently enough. But if the truth had been told I didn't like the suggestion which the messenger had made.

The train moved off quickly and I swung my lantern, as was my habit, by way of bidding good night to Luke Granger. Then I went into the station house with the little package clutched tightly under my rubber coat, expecting to find the man there who had come on with the body. But he had gone, being anxious, no doubt, to get to the hotel as quickly as possible. No. 39 was the last train which stopped at Red Ravine until 6:10 the next morning. So my work for the night was done and I had only to look up the doors, see that things were all right about the place and sit down to my newspaper in the little room which served as my sleeping quarters.

Twenty years had passed since I first found myself installed at Red Ravine as telegraph operator in the railway station. Being content with the humdrum sort of life and faithful to my duties, I had come by degrees to attend to all the work which the place required. That is, I was the ticket agent, baggage-master and keeper of the station, besides acting for the express company and continuing my charge of the telegraph key. These combined labors made it pretty close work for me, but they all yielded a very comfortable income; and as I was troubled with no unsatisfied ambitions, I counted myself well fixed. As I have intimated, I slept in the station, partly to keep guard on the company's property and partly from choice; being a bachelor and without kin, I had nothing to attract me elsewhere. My duties had grown a part of second nature and I had lived in the little town so long that the younger generation had come to speak of me as "Old Billy." That was, I suppose, because my hair was getting gray and my joints a little stiff.

The Red Ravine station was a wooden building, about forty feet long and twenty feet wide. It was divided into two compartments, the larger one being for freight and baggage and the smaller one for passengers. My own little room was only a piece partitioned off from the freight quarter, and ten feet square and connected by a door with a box of an office in the passenger's room, which served both for selling tickets and holding the telegraph key. In this latter department, also, was placed the old-fashioned iron safe, in which I locked up my valuable express packages when any happened to come to Red Ravine. The village, I ought to explain, had grown up entirely through the influence of the great iron works of Eldridge & Ricketson. There were rich beds of ore a few miles to the north, and these as well as the foundry, which employed 400 or 500 hands, were controlled by the firm I have mentioned. There had been some trouble at the works recently—a strike or something growing out of delay in paying the men their wages. This is how it happened that the $13,000 money package came into my keeping for a night.

Well, when I had made all snug about the station and got off my wet clothing, I sat down comfortably with pipe and newspaper to enjoy my customary reading. The storm outside continued to rage more and more fiercely, but within things were cozy as could be. I had a blazing fire in the stove, a cheerful light, an easy chair, plenty of good tobacco—the only luxury in which I was really extravagant—a fresh newspaper and a bottle of good Holland gin, wherewith to make my regular nocturnal toddy. Certainly these were pleasant surroundings for an old fellow like me, and as a rule they yielded as much solid comfort as a man has a right to expect in this world. But that night things seemed all out of geer, as I have said. My pipe didn't soothe me as was its wont; try as I might I couldn't get interested in the newspaper; an uncomfortable feeling of dread—a feeling that some shadowy but horrible thing was about to happen—possessed my mind and even when I had mixed up a toddy considerable stronger than usual it failed to bring the relief I had hoped for.

"It all comes of that pesky money package," I muttered to myself. "Why couldn't it have got here on the 11:30 and saved me the job of keeping it here over night?"

Just at this moment came a terrific clap of thunder and a flash of lightning vivid enough to make the lamp dim. I had locked up the package in the safe and put the key—there was no combination lock—in my pocket. But I had not the largest faith in the security of the old safe. It had occurred to me often that a person could open it even if he wasn't a skillful cracksman. It was my custom to leave my door open between my little room and the ticket office, so that if Red Ravine was called on the telegraph key I could hear it. The instrument had been clicking away at a great rate for the past hour; but as it was none of my business I had paid no attention to what was going on over the wires. I judged now from the nearness of the lightning and the jerky sounds of the instrument that the storm was playing the mischief with the messages. I passed into the ticket office, where a light was left burning, and stood for some time thinking whether the money package would be less exposed in the safe than it would be under the mattress of my bed, and I finally concluded that the latter place would be hardest for any possible thief to reach. So I took out the heavy brown envelope and stowed it away under the mattress. Then I took a second glass of toddy, which was usually against my rule, but which I thought the circumstances warranted.

Once more I sat down to my newspaper and pipe, but with no better success than before. The storm seemed now to have centered right over the little station. Peal after peal of thunder rent the air and the lightning played about the sky like phosphorus on an inky background. If you have ever chanced to be in a telegraph office during a thunder storm, you may have seen the electricity dash down the wires in a way to make timid people nervous. Even veteran operators, like myself, wouldn't want to undertake to receive that sort of message. I was tempted to close the key, but the meaningless ticking had a sort of fascination for me in the mood I then was. It was like the incoherent mutterings of a maniac where now and then, at long intervals only, could one distinguish a word or sentence. Maybe the extra allowance of toddy had made me more imaginative than usual, and given a weird coloring to my thoughts; for listening to the rapid click-click, I remember of fancying that some spirit-hand had got hold of the key and was pouring out a wail of woe over the wires.

I was too restless to sit still and too nervous to go to bed. Besides, even if I hadn't been so upset in my mind, it is doubtful whether I could have slept through such a storm as that.

To occupy myself about something I relighted my lantern, went into the freight room, examined again the bolts of the doors and the fastenings of the windows and returned to the room more worried and upset than ever. Just as I was entering my own nest the light of the lantern fell squarely on the wooden box. Oddly enough, until that moment I had forgotten all about the dead young woman. Thinking so steadily of the $13,000 had, I suppose, driven the box out of mind. But I can't say it was any comfort to have it brought back now; for a corpse is never the most cheerful of company, and, feeling as I did then, I would a great deal rather have had no company at all.

It must have been the imp of the perverse, I suppose, that impelled me, after the box had been brought back to my mind, to leave the door open so that I could sit and stare at it with morbid curiosity! As I have already said, my sleeping apartment was partitioned off from the freight room and was connected with the latter by a door. The body had been placed in such a position that when this door was open the head of the box was in sight. Two or three times I got up to shut the door, but some strange fatality drove me back to my chair and caused me to keep in view the box with its sad freight. All this time the storm raged, the thunder discharged its mighty batteries, the lightning flashed and the mad ravings of the telegraph continued. I caught my hand trembling as I tried to refill my pipe. Nervousness, no doubt; but possibly an observer might have thought old Billy was frightened.

I had just risen to wind the little clock on the shelf, when suddenly out of the hitherto meaningless ticking of the instrument sharply and distinctly came to my ears these sounds:

which in spoken words meant, "Watch the box!"

I started as if a charge of electricity had shot through my frame. I could fairly feel my face growing white. I stood motionless, clutching the back of the chair, and with my eyes riveted in a vacant stare at the table in the telegraph office. I knew this was no work of an excited imagination. The words to my practiced ear, were as plain as if shouted in clarion tones. There had come no call for Red Ravine and the message ended without signature or mark, but abruptly, as it had begun. More than that, it was not the writing of any operator on any section of the line. I would have sworn to that with as much positiveness as you would to the tones of a voice with which you are familiar. In the dot and dash alphabet we learn to distinguish who is handling the keys almost with as much accuracy as others distinguish handwriting. And in all my experience I had never heard the sounder click off a message like that.

While I stood dazed and almost paralyzed (for you must remember that old Billy's nerves were strung to a terrible pitch that night) the rapid and unintelligible click-click was resumed as if a demon had again got hold of the key. It was fully five minutes before I mustered courage enough to pass into the ticket office and sit down by the table. Not once had I turned back to look at the box. Almost at the instant of my sitting down at the table the clicking stopped short, as it had done before, and then these words were repeated: Watch the box.

Every dot, every dash, every letter, every word, came with such horrible distinctness, that it seemed to send a sharp pain tingling through my ears. It was like the loud whispering of some ghostly voice. Then again, broke out the jargon of sound that turned the clicking into meaningless confusion.

I sprang up from the table and with the now strengthened conviction that it was no delusion, no fancy, but that the sound had come plainly over the wires I felt my courage returning and resolved to heed the mysterious warning. The rolling of the thunder and the mad roar of the storm no longer depressed me. I stepped boldly back into my own room and rested my eyes unflinchingly on the mysterious box. What was its mysterious freight? Why had the phantom of the storm sent those startling words over the wires? What unknown hand had reached out from the very lightning itself to warn me of some impending danger? These questions rushed through my mind as I felt the dread fear disappearing and found myself of a sudden growing strangely calm.

The clock struck ten. I turned to the shelf and with a hand that no longer trembled inserted the key and wound it composedly. Would it be the last time that I should perform that simple task? No matter. Happier than most men, because content with my humble lot, it should never be said that old Billy flinched in the face of duty. For that night it was my duty—my one sacred, all-important duty—to guard the treasure left to my keeping. And guard it I would while life remained.

When I had finished winding the clock I took down from the shelf an old rusty pistol which had lain for years undisturbed. It was not loaded, nor had I either powder or bullet anywhere in the station. But the weapon was an ugly looking one and carried a sort of silent force in case of too aggressive argument. After examining the rusty lock I put the pistol on the table, made a fresh glass of toddy, drank it, lighted my pipe and—closed the door that opened into the freight-room. Now that I was thoroughly myself again I found it easy enough to shut out the sight of that ominous oblong box.

It was not until the clock struck again—that is eleven—that I made up my mind to go to bed. All that time the storm held on, although the thunder had began to rumble more distantly. I threw off my coat and slippers, put out the light in the ticket office and turned that in my sleeping room down to a low flame. Then I drew the money package from under the mattress and pinned it securely to my woolen shirt under my vest. This done, and the table so placed that I could reach both the lamp and the pistol, I opened the door into the freight room some three or four inches and then threw myself upon the bed. Just as my head touched the pillow the instrument, which had grown quiet now, clicked off for the third time, loudly, distinctly, slowly, its words of warning: Watch the box!

This time the warning was not heeded. I had not gone to bed to sleep, but for the very purpose of watching the box. Standing as it did, with the head close to the door, and therefore close to the box itself, the bed afforded the best point from which to keep an eye on the suspicious freight. Had my faith in the telegraphic clicking been less, or had my own sense of great responsibility deserted me for a single moment, I should have certainly given up the job of watching as foolish, and in that case it is not likely that this narrative would ever have been written. But I believed in the thrice-repeated message and I did not let drowsiness overcome patience. Twelve, one, two—how very slowly the hours seem to drag themselves. The low flame of the lamp went out as the oil ran dry. What a relief it was to hear the clock strike! At last, somewhere about midnight, the storm had broken. I could see the stars as they came through the window in the freight room, which was on a line of vision with the box. How strangely still it seemed after the mighty roar of the storm and the sharp clap of thunder. Not a click from the instrument now. Not a sound save the sturdy ticking of the clock. Still I lay listening, watching, with faculties all alert and my eyes always on the oblong box.

A little past two—perhaps ten minutes. The silence almost painful in its profoundness. Nothing but the ticktick of the clock, which, to my eager ear, had taken on this sound, which it kept, repeating over and over:

"Watch—the—box! Watch—the—box!"

What was that?

Not the clock, not the telegraph instrument. No, it was the sound as of the grating of iron. Faint, very faint, yet still audible to my ear! Breathing regularly and deeply, as one breathes in sleep, I lay and listened. Another interval of silence and then the grating sound came again, this time a trifle louder than before. The light of the stars shining through the window made the objects in the freight-room just visible. Almost simultaneously with the second grating noise I saw the cover of the wooden box rising slowly from the end furtherest removed from the bed. I could feel my heart thumping away like a sledge hammer, but I continued to breath heavily and to watch keenly. Gently and noiselessly the cover was pressed upward until it reached an angle which completely shut out from my view the window beyond. A moment later the figure of a man came out of the shadows, while the box-cover was let down as noiselessly as it had been raised.

This, then, was the burden of the box. This was the meaning of the mysterious warning which the sounder had spoken.

With cat-like tread the figure moved toward the door of my bed-room. Still I lay as in deep sleep. On the threshold the figure paused and in a moment later a single ray of light like a silver thread pierced the darkness and fell upon the bed. Luckily it did not strike my face and in an instant I closed my eyes. As I had anticipated, the ray of light was well directed toward my pillow and by the sense of feeling I knew it rested a moment on my face. Satisfied that I was in deep slumber, the figure, still with cat-like tread, glided through the bedroom and into the ticket-office. My eyes were wide open again by this time. The light from the dark lantern had increased, but its rays were now turned toward the safe. Obviously the robber believed the treasure that he sought was there. I waited until he had knelt down to examine the lock, and then, with steps as noiseless as his own, I slipped from the bed and toward the half-opened door. So intent was he in examining the safe that it was not until I was within reach of him that he heard me. He sprang to his feet, bringing the glass of the lantern full into my face and reaching for his revolver, which he had laid upon the top of the safe. But he was too late. With the rusty old pistol, held by its long barrel, I dealt him a crushing blow on the head just as his fingers grasped his own weapon. He fell heavily, without uttering a groan. The lattern was extinguished as it fell and with trembling fingers I struck a match and lighted the lamp in the office. As its rays fell upon the upturned face of the robber, I saw that blood was flowing from the wound I had inflicted, and I saw, too, that his face was delicate in its outlines and intelligent in expression. I had no time to notice more, for I felt, now that the danger was past, the need of aid. So, after binding the unconscious man's feet and arms and bathing his head in cold water, I pulled on my boots and overcoat and started in hot haste for the hotel.

Half-way on the road I met a covered carriage, drawn by one horse. I took it to be the turn-out of Matthews, the hotel proprietor, and, wondering what he could be out for at that hour, I shouted his name. I got no response. Then I cried out at the top of my voice:

"I've killed a burglar down at the station!"

Whoever was in the carriage must have heard me but the horse only quickened his sharp trot and disappeared in the darkness.

They give me a great deal more credit, the people of Red Ravine, for that night's adventure than I deserve. And I do not blame them for laughing how things came out. For when a party of us got back to the station my unconscious burglar had disappeared and the tracks next morning showed that the covered carriage which I had met on the road had drawn up at the platform. Who was in it? Well, I couldn't swear, but I have a notion that it contained the gentleman who had come on with the dead body. At all events, neither he nor the body was ever seen in the town again. I had the satisfaction of delivering the money package safely to Eldridge & Ricketson, but the check they gave me was not really merited. For what would have happened had it not been for the mysterious message which no man sent?

which supplies a want most of eminent ability have devoted years of study and experiment to and—a specific for diseases of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urinary Organs and Nervous System—and from the time of its discovery has rapidly increased in favor, gaining the approval and confidence of medical men and those who have used it; it has become a favorite with all classes and wherever introduced has superseded all other treatments.

DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS

are the most prevalent, dangerous and fatal affections that afflict mankind, and so varied and insidious in their character, that persons often suffer for a long time before knowing what ails them. The most characteristic symptoms are gradual wasting away of the whole body, pain in the back, side or loins; a weak, feeble, exhausted feeling; loss of appetite and dread of exercise; scanty and painful discharge of variously colored urine; inability to retain or expel the urine; nitinate shreds or casts in the urine; and, when the disease is of long duration, there is much emaciation and general nervous prostration.

THE ONLY CURE.

We say positively, and without fear of contradiction, that DAY'S KIDNEY PAD is the first and only infallible cure for every form of Kidney disease. It is the best remedy yet discovered for this complaint, and more effectual in its operation than any other treatment. By using faithfully and persistently no case will be found so inveterate as not to yield to its powerful remedial virtues.

IS STRONGLY ENDORSED.

We have the most unequivocal testimony to its curative powers from many persons of high character, intelligence and responsibility. Our book, "How a Life was Saved," giving the history of this new discovery, and a large record of most remarkable cures, sent free. Write for it.

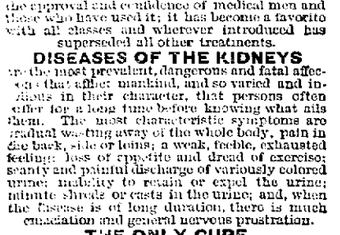

DAY'S KIDNEY PAD is sold by druggists, or will be sent by mail, free of postage, on receipt of their price: Regular, $2.00; Special, for obstinate cases of long standing, $3.00; Children's, $1.50. Address, DAY KIDNEY PAD CO, Toledo, O.

CAUTION. Owing to the many worthless Kidney Pads now seeking a sale on our reputation, we deem it due the afflicted to warn them. Ask for DAY'S KIDNEY PAD, take no other, and you will not be deceived.

HEIMSTREET is the only agent in Rock county for Day's Kidney Pads.

A BOY'S STORY.

A Twelve-Year-Old Boy's Journey From Kansas to Pennsylvania and Return.

Ten days ago, says a Bradford (Pa.) letter to the New York Sun, a dirty-faced, bare-footed boy, just tall enough to look over the counter and carrying a fish-pole, entered a restaurant in this city.

"I've been fishin' all day on Bolivar Run," he said to a waiter. "I walked more'n five miles and didn't ketch nothin'. I ain't had nothin' to eat but a piece o' pie since yesterday."

He climbed on one of the tall stools in front of the lunch counter and laid down a five-cent piece. The waiter told him that if he hadn't anything to eat all day the best thing he could do would be to go home and get something.

"Go home!" he replied. "I guess if I wait till I get home for something to eat I'll be starved to death, Mister. My home is in Kansas. D' you know where that is? My uncle, Joe Snyder, lives up here in Tarport, but his wife ain't no good, 'cause she won't let me stay there. I ran away from home 'cause my father wouldn't buy me a velocipede and jest as soon as he sends me fifteen dollars I'll buy me one and go back home on it. I'd like to have some o' them pork and beans. A man over to the drug store gi' me that nickel and this fish line. If there ain't money enough I think my Uncle Joe 'd pay for the pork and beans if you ask him. D' you know him?"

A number of persons in the restaurant gathered around the boy, attracted by his talk and independent manner. He was plied with questions. He said:

"I ain't a goin' to talk no more till I get somethin' to eat and that settles it."

The waiter was ordered by a bystander to give the little fellow all he wanted. Between mouthfuls and in reply to interrogatories, he entertained his listeners with the following extraordinary story of his wanderings:

"My name is Frank Wisner. I live in Mayview, Jewett County, Kansas. I am goin' on twelve years old. I had a bicycle and could ride on it bully, but I liked a velocipede the best. I asked my father to buy me one and he wouldn't do it. I told him if he didn't I'd run away and earn enough money to buy one myself. He laughed and said that'd be a bully good scheme, 'cause he didn't think I'd run away. I know'd my uncle Joe Snyder lived in Tarport, but I didn't know where Tarport was. I found out it was in Pennsylvany where they dug kerosene and I know'd I could find it. One morning early, just after April fool's day, I got up and made up my mind to start for Tarport. I jumped on my bicycle and away I went. It was a rainin' and the goin' was tough, but I rode all day. I had twenty-five cents in my pocket that I was a savin' up for the Fourth. I went through two or three towns and slept in a barn the first night. Next morning I got some milk at a house and a piece o' bread. I told the folks that I lived in a town that wasn't far from there, for fear they'd keep me and send me back home. I was awful stiff when I got on my bicycle that mornin', but I know'd it was a good ways to Tarport yet and I braced up and went ahead. I give out before night and walked a good ways, rollin' my bicycle along with me. I came to a place where there was three houses together. I went to one o' the houses an' seen a boy on the stoop a cryin' like everything. I asked him if he thought I could stay all night, and he said he guessed not, 'cause his little sister had just died. Then he cried harder and it made me cry and I wished I was back home. But I knowed I must be a terrible ways from Mayview and thought I might as well go ahead as to go back and git a lickin' after I got there. So I went to another house. A woman said I could stay there and have some supper. She asked me all sorts o' questions, but I told her I was only goin' a little ways further to my uncle's. There was a boy in this house that they called Jack. He was bigger'n me, but treated me good. The next mornin' I was too stiff to git on my bibycle, so I made up my mind to walk. I offered my bicycle to the boy, but he wouldn't take it unless I'd take fifty cents for it. I took the money and started on. I got a long ride that day in a farmer's wagon and he wanted me to go and stay at his house, for I told him I'd been a livin' on a farm where they didn't treat me good and I was goin' back home. I said no I must go home. He left me in a town called Townsville and paid for my supper and bed. I was awful homesick that night and bellered myself to sleep, thinkin' I'd start back home in the mornin' and let the velocipede go. When I got up, though, and got my breakfast, I felt better and pulled out agin for Uncle Joe's. That day I came up to three men settin' along the road. They was tough-lookin' fellers and hollered at me. I stopped. I asked 'em how fur it was to Tarport, and they laughed and said there wasn't no such place 'round there. Then I told 'em it was in the oil regions and they laughed agin, and said they was agoin' that way and I could ride with them. But they didn't have nothin' to ride on and I found out they was tramps. I was glad I met 'em, though, for they showed me how to steal rides on railroads and how to play I was lame, so that railroad men would pity me and not put me off. I was with them fellers three days and then they wanted me to play I was the blind son of one of 'em, so they could make some money on me; but I wouldn't do that and they made me leave 'em. I was up to the railroad business then, though, and had a nice time gittin' along. Once I rode five miles hanging on to the rod under the car. That came near chokin' me to death with dust, and I never tried that agin. I rode a fearful ways one day on a cow ketcher, till the engineer seen me. He was goin' to put me off, but I told him who I was and where I was goin', and he took me in his engine and took me as far as he went.

By and by—I don't know how many days it was, but it was a good while—I got to Chicago. There I see the boats on the lake and wanted to git on one o' them. I didn't 'spect I could, but I talked with a feller on one o' the docks that said he was a goin' on one of the boats to Buffalo. He knowed all about Tarport 'cause he had worked in Bradford. He said maybe he could git the Captain to let me ride, and the Captain was a bully feller. I told him how I was goin' to Uncle Joe's and how I left home. He made a man write a letter to my father to tell him where I was and then told me I could go with him to Buffalo. I got through all right and the Captain paid my fare all the way to Tarport. I found Uncle Joe's house and when he seen me he looked so funny at me, he was so took back, that I had to laugh. 'By hckey! Frank,' says he, 'how in thunder did you git here?' When I told him how he only said, 'Well, I'll be cussed!' and took me to see my aunt. She didn't like me and I didn't like her and I only stayed at Uncle Joe's two days. That was two weeks ago, nearly. I came to Bradford and went to blackin' boots but the other bootblacks busted up my business and I've been kind o' hangin' around ever since, waitin' to hear from my father. A man down to the Biddle House wrote to him for me, asking for fifteen dollars, so I could come home. You can bet if it comes—and it'll come, sure—I'll buy me a velocipede and ride all the way home on it."

The boy's story at once interested the oil men in him. They provided for him handsomely until Thursday. On that day the expected remittance from home arrived. Frank was determined to invest in a velocipede and start home at once upon it. He was induced to go back by rail, however, by a present of a velocipede, which he saw properly expressed to him at his Kansas home before starting.

A Lover's Quarrel.

It is the fashion in Hungary for peasant girls and women to adorn their heads with gay-colored handkerchiefs twisted cunningly into the hair, so that their gaudy folds alternate with the heavy flat plaits in which Magyar maids and matrons are wont to arrange their tresses. Nothing more intrinsically harmless than a head-dress of this kind can be imagined; yet such a handkerchief has recently proved the "leading motive" to a terrible tragedy. A few days ago a young engaged couple entered a draper's shop in Sepsi-Szent-Gyorgy for the purpose of buying a wedding cap for the bride, who duly selected one to her taste, but while her betrothed was paying for his purchase, cast her eyes upon an uncommonly handsome kerchief and expressed her eager desire to possess it. The enamored youth, however, peremptorily refused to invest any more of his capital in head-gear, whereupon, after rating him soundly for his stinginess, she abruptly turned her back upon him and left the shop. Indignant at this proceeding he straightway betook himself to the dwelling of a rival village beauty, to whom he offered not only his hand and heart but the cap he had purchased for his former fiance, besides the many-hued handkerchief that had awakened her longings. All his offerings were accepted; but his forsaken love, unable to bear the mortification inflicted upon her by his faithlessness and the triumph of her rival, promptly hanged herself in her bed-room. Considerable sympathy was manifested with her sad fate by her fellow-villagers, who followed her body to the grave in large numbers, and the fickle bridegroom, meeting the funeral cortege as it passed down the main street, was so stricken by remorse that he also put an end to his life the same evening.—London Telegraph.

—The Mutual Improvement Club will open its season next Monday evening, with a study of "Macbeth." Miss Mary Grubb, Mr. G. A. Stearns, and Miss Hathcrall are to give papers.

—The Odd Fellows dance, in Apollo hall, last evening, did not call out a jam, but those who were present enjoyed themselves hugely. Anderson's band gave the music, and all went merry.

—Rev. Brooke Herford, of Chicago, is to preach in All Souls church next Tuesday evening on "The Small End of Great Problems," this being the opening meeting of the Unitarian conference.

—A telegram received from New Mexico to-day states that John Pease, son of J. J. R. Pease, who was reported as very ill, is somewhat better. This will be glad news indeed, to the anxious friends here.

—John Coppin, who is employed at the Doty works, got his hand caught between two castings to-day, and had one finger so badly cut that it will be close work to save it so that it will be of any good.

—Last evening there was a large gathering of friends at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sale, and the party was indeed a brilliant and enjoyable one. Tuckwood's band furnished fine music for those who delighted in the merry dance, and other features of cheer and hospitality abounded. The guests passed the evening most happily, and all possible arrangements for the comfort and pleasure of the company were provided. The company numbered seventy-five or a hundred.

—E. T. Foote, the clothier, had his advertising wagon out to-day. It consisted of Nigger Jack's dray transformed by art into a cotton cloth car, with appropriate inscriptions upon the sides. Jack himself was the Goddess of Liberty, with a silk hat and a piece of the bloody shirt wound about, while from the horse's harness swung a bell which called the attention of all to clear the way. Four old brooms graced the corners of this palace car, and altogether it was a queer looking procession.

—The firm of Carle & Nash after a short but pleasant duration is amicably dissolved. W. F. Carle retires from the firm, and has purchased the stock of goods of his brother, L. B. Carle, at which store he may hereafter be found J. W. Nash resumes his place in the firm of Nash & Son. All debts incurred by Carle and Nash will be paid by Nash & Son, and all accounts due Carle & Nash, are to be paid by Nash & Son. Both parties will heartily welcome all who may favor them at their respective places with a call.

—Dr. Bigelow, of Waukesha, who has just served thirty days for a drunk, was last night in a beastly state of intoxication again, and was this morning brought into the Police Court, and fined $10. In default of payment he was sentenced to jail not to exceed twenty days. The poor Doctor seems a good deal of a wreck. It seems that in years past he had quite a practice, but drink added to a quarrel which he had in which he fatally stabbed a man, seems to have shattered him, and he has little of his old manhood left. He has been hanging around the city since his release from jail, and the tarrying at the cup has again got him into trouble.

MRS. J. B. WILSON, Tiffin, Ohio, says: —I have worn an Improved Excelsior Kidney Pad, and received more relief from all remedies I have ever tried. I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers. —See Adv.

NO GO.

Democrats, since the election returns, seem to be very absent minded. This morning we were somewhat amused to see one of the prominent lights (electric lights) step into his family carriage, tuck his buffalo robe around him, jerk up the lines, and in a stentorian voice, sing out "g'lang." The horse did not appear to make his usual time, and the driver was about to lay on the gad, when a good Republican happened along and told him his horse was still hitched to the post. He didn't want anything said about it, and so mum is the word.

Speaking by signs is never (aloud) allowed; neither are any Impurities of the Blood allowed to speak in the shape of Pimples or Blotches when Spring Blossom is taken.

A YOUNG THIEF.

George Ashley, a young man employed on Burr Robbins' farm has been helping himself to his employer's property, and seems to have taken a particular fancy to buffalo robes, whips, and cash. He was detected, and then confessed that he had stolen $20 from Mrs. Robbins' mother, and about $80 worth of buffalo robes and other property. A part of the cash was recovered, and most of the other property, he having sold it to various parties, who turned up the property on finding it was stolen. Ashley was arrested on a charge of having stolen three robes, $13 in cash, a whip and a coat, valued in all at $28. He was brought before Justice Nolan this afternoon, waved examination, and will go before Judge Conger Monday and plead guilty. He is only eighteen years old, and says he has no folk, and has been working on a farm in New Jersey before coming here.

That was a clever boy, who said that he liked a good rainy day, "too rainy to go to school, and just rainy enough to go fishing." They were clever Chemists who discovered and compounded Spring Blossom, Sovereign cure for Dyspepsia and derangement of the Stomach. Sold by A. J. Roberts, and Croft & Sherer.

A Nevada Camp.

[From the Virginia City (Nev.) Enterprise.]

Candelaria is without doubt the roughest and most uncomfortable mining camp in Nevada. The houses, what there are of them, are poorly built, and the cold wind that has been blowing for the past few days goes through as easily as it would through a sieve. A great many people still live in tents. Wood costs $20 and is scarce and poor at that. It takes a capitalist to keep a fire going here. Water is retailed at five cents a gallon and is hauled in wagons from Columbus, eight miles. This water is not very good being impregnated with alkali, but the average Candelarian doesn't care much for that, the majority of them prefering beer, which, by the way, is sold at the rate of a bit a drink in many of the saloons. The whisky is a good quality, so you can see we are not altogether without the blessing of civilization. At present the camp is enlivened by the presence of a lot of Belleville people, who are here attending the preliminary examination of Chid Brummett, who killed Billy Bell in Belleville last Thursday. The killing occurred in front of the Belleville Hotel on Thursday evening. Bell went to the faro game where Chid was dealing Wednesday night, and put $5 on the lay-out. Chid said "I don't want to play for you." Bell said "I have been after you for three years and I will get you yet. I would like to have six bits a dozen for whipping such a fellow as you. You think you are a fighter because you licked a drunk in Austin." The next day they passed each other and didn't speak. At 6 o'clock in the evening Chid was walking up to the hotel from Jackson's. Bell came up from the other corner of the street. Chid got to the porch four or five feet ahead of Billy. Chid had taken two or three steps on the sidewalk in the act of stepping up when Chid turned and shot him in the neck. The ball went through the collar button-hole of the shirt and was taken out from the shoulder blade at the back. Pick-handle Gulch is the name of the real mining town of the section, being located in the ravine directly below the mines.

THRILLING ADVENTURE.

A Miner Entombed Alive in a Tunnel for over Six Hours.

One of the most thrilling adventures in the annals of mining in Amador County happened in the Zeile mine, near Jackson, on Wednesday last. At the morning shift at seven o'clock, Nicolaus Noce, an Italian, with a number of other miners, went to work taking out ore from the 240 foot level. Noce, it seems, was separated some distance from his companions. They had been at work but a few minutes, when the premonitory symptoms of a coming cave, such as the creaking of timbers and falling of small pieces of rock, told the workers in language not to be disregarded that it was time to seek safer quarters. They were not slow to obey the warnings, immediately withdrawing from the point of danger, preserving their communication with the shaft. In withdrawing they were not forgetful of Noce, shouting to him to get out of danger's way. He, however, not having observed the premonitions of the approaching disaster, did not realize the nature of the impending trouble. The cries of his comrades conveyed the idea that something was wrong, and he retreated towards the face of the tunnel. No sooner had he got out of the way then the crash came. One half of the ledge next to the hanging wall came down with a thundering sound, crushing the heavy timbers like match sticks, the cave involving about thirty feet along the ledge, rearing an effectual barrier between Noce and his comrades and liberty. It was not long before the awful nature of his situation dawned upon Noce. He was cut off in the tunnel, a lone prisoner in one of the recesses of the mine, with hundreds of tons of rock and debris choking up the only possible outlet from his cell. From the cave the tunnel was sixty feet in length, which would afford air for a day or two. He was well provided with candles, having two or three with him, and he began to contemplate the prospect of having to subsist by eating them. He tried to scale the loose rock and worm his way through to the other side, between the roof and the dislodged mass, but very soon realized that this was utterly impracticable. At first the miners on the safe side of the cave thought their comrade was buried under the mass, but this idea was soon dissipated by hearing the voice of the imprisoned one calling to them that he was alive and unhurt. Under the direction of Superintendent Rose men were set at work to clear a passage way large enough for the man to crawl through. They worked close to the hanging wall, propping up where necessary as they advanced. The men were changed frequently and worked like heroes, and the narrow passage grew rapidly under their exertions. Noce, from the other side, worked literally for dear life, squeezing himself through openings surprisingly small, lacerating his breast and back and limbs by contact with the jagged quartz. After six hours of toil the borers met, and Noce, to his infinite delight, emerged comparatively uninjured among his comrades. He was scared, as any would be under such circumstances. The distance through the debris was over twenty feet. —Amador (Cal.) Ledger.

A Beautiful Basket Plant.

The finest hanging baskets we have ever seen have been of single plants of the Ivy-leaved Geranium. The richness and elegance of the foliage and the drooping or trailing habit of this plant are qualifications it possesses, rendering it eminently serviceable for baskets and vases. One plant is enough for a basket, but, except in rare cases, it will require more time than is afforded the first season to show in its best condition. The plant is easily kept over winter, and the second season, if attention is given by the use of manure-water to sustain it, the growth will be exuberant. There are now so many varieties of this plant that one has the opportunity to indulge his taste in selection; there are golden yellow-leaved ones, bronze, green with white margin, and one, L'Elegante, that has its green leaves margined with white that is tinged and streaked with pink. The colors of the flowers are different with each variety; there are scarlet, and crimson, and rose, and pink, and white; again there are single and double flowers.

One of the best varieties for a hanging basket, on account of its fine foliage and free growth, is the double-flowered sort, Koenig Albert, having mauve, or purplish lilac-colored flowers. The double flowers last much longer than the single ones, and this adds much to the value of the plant. For large baskets, where the best effect is desired in a short time, several of these plants of different kinds could be used for the margin, with other plants in the center.—Vick's Magazine.

Successful Love Chase.

Yesterday morning an eloping couple arrived in this city. On the same train was a pursuer who had followed the fugitives for four days and nights, but without their knowledge. John W. Brack and Miss Elizabeth Morgan, both of Jasper County, Mo., were betrothed and the time set for their marriage was last Friday night. On the same day a rival, Thomas Fremont, induced the expectant bride to elope with him and they took the train south. The rightful claimant took the train in hot pursuit. He followed them for four days and nights without sleeping and at Marshall took the same train with the eloping couple for this city. On arriving here they engaged rooms at the Pacific House, but they had been hardly shown to their rooms when their pursuer, attended by a policeman, put in an appearance. Thomas Fremont proposed to leave the decision to the lady. After some hesitation, and with a show of great regret at taking leave of the man with whom she had eloped, she made her decision in favor of the gentleman to whom she was first engaged and decided to cast her destiny and fortune with Mr. Brack. Mr. Fremont, the disappointed eloper, relinquished all claims to the lady and took his leave. Accordingly, and as a happy finale to the episode, Mr. John W. Brack and Miss Elizabeth Morgan were united in the legal bonds of matrimony at the Pacific House yesterday morning.—Shreveport (La.) Standard.
